TRACK & FIELD

ORIGINS The origins of a number of athletics events date back to ancient Greece. The discus throw and various running events, for example, were part of the ancient Olympics. The marathon was introduced at the 1896 Athens Olympics, the first Games of the modern era, in honour of the ancient Greek soldier Pheidippides. According to the legend, he ran from Marathon to Athens with news of a Greek victory over the Persians, then died from exhaustion. Events such as the pole vault may have originated with European farmers who used long poles to help them vault over ditches. And naval gunners hefting cannonballs may have been the originators of the shotput.

CRISIS FOR CUBA

Crisis for Cuba at the University of Manitoba track. Gold-medal high jumper Javier Sotomayer failed doping, testing positive for cocaine. Sotomayer denied using the drug and the Cuban delegation charged that persons unknown, or at least unnamed, had spiked his food or drink. Only days earlier the woman's gold-medal high jumper, Dominican Juana Rosario, was also stripped of her medal for a doping failure - in her case a banned steroid - and too denied taking the drug. Sotomayer's test meant double gold medals for Canada - Mark Boswell and Kwaku Boateng had made identical silver-medal jumps and, in less than ideal fashion, moved up to gold.

TINY ISLAND MAKES HISTORY IN WINNIPEG

As the United States, Cuba and Canada battled it out for the medal count lead at the Pan Am Games, a tiny island country of 40,000, no bigger than 100 square miles, celebrated its first major international medal. Kareem Streete-Thompson's silver in the men's long jump was the first medal ever for the Cayman Islands at a Pan Am Games, Commonwealth Games, Olympics or a world championship.

Accustomed to sending only small teams to even the largest of international events - the country itself has fewer residents than Portage la Prairie and Brandon combined - Streete-Thompson's medal is a watershed that has been a long time coming. The team's chef de mission immediately phoned home to the tiny three-island nation, waking up the country's director of sports with the news that Streete-Thompson had won. By the time all the phone calls were done, hundreds of sports officials in the Cayman Islands knew: they had their first medal.

LIFE IN THE FAST LANE

Graham Hood saw gold and his parents. Donovan Bailey was looking for redemption. Both found what they were after at the finish line.

Winnipeg-born Hood, electrified the capacity crowd at the University of Manitoba Stadium on the track and field competition's final evening, with a brilliant kick to capture gold in the men's 1,500-metre final. The 27-year-old Torontonion had a plan: Keep with the pack for 1,400 metres and then bolt around the final turn. But Hood had not accounted for the throng of fans who began to mount a roar as he found his feet and started to slice through the field in the backstretch of the final lap. As he came down the home stretch, Hood could make out his parents jumping up and down in the stands amid a sea of Canadian flags and fans. He then simply switched gears and no one would catch him ... an evening he'll remember for a long time to come.

So too will the capacity crowd that witnessed Bailey's explosion out of the blocks in the men's 4x100 metre relay. His sprint sparked the Canadian quartet to a silver medal, behind the speedy Brazilians who captured gold with a Games record time of 38.18 seconds.

Bailey, still recovering from a torn Achilles tendon suffered last fall and a turbulent week of controversy in Winnipeg surrounding his poster boy turned bad boy involvement with the Games, caught up to both runners ahead of him in the staggered start, giving Canada a commanding first-leg lead. The team's final time: 38:49.

Canada added two more athletics medals that last night when Kwaku Boateng and Mark Boswell won silvers - which later became golds as a result of the winner's positive dope test - in the men's high-jump after posting identical leaps of 2.25 metres. The Canadian track and field team collected 14 medals in total, a marked improvement from the six garnered at the 1995 Pan Am Games. Other highlights from the athletics competition included the gold-medal run in the 3,000-metre steeplechase by New Brunswick's Joel Bourgeois, and Leah Pells' breath-stopping photo finish silver in the women's 1,500 metre.

TO RUN OR NOT TO RUN

In the eyes of many Pan Am Games enthusiasts, Donovan Bailey arrived in Winnipeg a day late and a race short. Bailey, the defending Olympic gold medallist and former world record holder, found himself at the center of a turbulent week-long storm of criticism that died a quiet death the night he took to the podium as an integral part of the silver-medal relay team. In days previous, Bailey was caught in the crossfire of spectator and athlete convictions targeted at his refusal of an offer from Athletics Canada to run the 100-metre showcase event because he was not asked earlier than he was. Initially, Bailey failed to qualify for the event when he placed third at the qualifier. But Bruny Surin, occupant of one of Canada's two berths in the competition, made little effort to hide his lack of enthusiasm for the Pan Ams. When Surin gave up his spot to compete elsewhere, Bailey would not accept the "alternate" invitation citing lack of preparation as the reason for his decision. The Pan Am community's contentions were fueled by Bailey's receipt of more than $200,000 from Winnipeg's Pan Am organizing committee to promote the Games during the final year leading up to the event. In his own defense, Bailey suggested that the Pan Am organizers understood his predicament where the selection process was concerned, and were happy with what he had done for the Games.

MAN, WOMAN & MACHINE

CYCLING

O R I G I N S Bicycle racing is as old as the bicycle, which was developed in the 19th century. One of the most popular early designs was the penny-farthing bicycle, so-named because of its huge front wheel and tiny rear wheel. These machines were also called "boneshakers", and their design made them inherently unstable. The forerunner of today's bicycles, called the "safety" bicycle, was developed in the late 1800s. It led to a boom in competitive and recreational cycling. Competitive cycling has traditionally consisted of road and track events, but the rise in popularity in recent years of all-terrain bicycles has led to a third discipline, mountain biking, being added to
